PREFACE

The author of this Dictionary is blind. It has taken about two years to complete this work, from July, 1944 to the day before Memorial Day, 1946. Although the author has consulted many unabridged dictionaries in English and also many of the English-Japanese dictionaries written in Japanese, he would not have been able to finish the book without the invaluable assistance of the many Niseis, who assisted him as his eyes and hands. The work, requiring almost six years of constant effort, consisted largely of writing and translating from almost all of the then existent English-Japanese dictionaries.

From the beginning of his career, the author spent almost thirty years in crusading for the adoption of Romanized letters to express Japanese thoughts, instead of being dependent upon the Japanese characters. He realized that the Japanese language had to be expressed in Romanized letters in order to progress with universal civilization. Although it is well said that, "Necessity is the mother of invention," the author rejoices to see that this necessity of adopting Romanized Letters in Japan has at last been realized.

By the invitation of General MacArthur, the Supreme Commander of Japan, an educational investigation mission for the country, headed by Dr. George D. Stoddard, president-elect of the University of Illinois, after studying the situation very thoroughly, presented their conclusion recommending the adoption of Romanized letters. This committee emphasized the necessity of such an adoption as most fundamental to the future progress and civilization of Japan.

The advantages of utilizing Romanized letters for the Japanese language in the place of Japanese and Chinese mixed characters are beyond comprehension. They are readily learned; they can be pronounced with precision; and they produce efficiency and rapidity in thought expressions.

Many of the people living in Japan believe that in using mixed characters, they are preserving the historic inspiration of Japanese thought, and that in adopting the Roman Letters, they will destroy that precious traditional spirit. This is an error from the author's point of view. He asserts that the adoption of Romanized letters does not destroy the essence of the Japanese thought, but rather will give the language impetus to develop into the highest forms of expression. By its euphonic sounds alone, the Japanese language can express its original meaning most freely and most admirably.

Of course, historically, the Japanese characters were indispensable while the Chinese civilization was influencing the Mother country. But, euphonically speaking, by adapting the hard Chinese characters to the most beautiful sounds of the proper Japanese language, much of the linguistic beauty of the original Japanese tongue was ignored and destroyed.

World-wide events have changed the destiny of Japan. Today, the roots of progress are found in the civilization and cultures of the Western countries. The author firmly reiterates that without the use of these Roman Letters, which are the basis of language in the Western world, Japan cannot hope to attain her highest development in international trade, culture, and science. Today, Japan is standing at the most important turning point of her national existence. We, the Japanese people, in order to build ourselves a new and better civilization by our own hands must have the tools, which will make this progress possible: Roman Letters.

With the above outlined ideals, the author began a serious and fundamental research in order to write this Dictionary. Webster, Funk and Wagnall, Winston, and MacMillan have all been freely consulted in their unabridged editions for the authoritative English references; also, many English-Japanese dictionaries have been consulted.

A serious handicap to the English-speaking students has arisen because of the tendency of many English-Japanese dictionaries to use too many Chinese characters, which are not readily understood by the Americans. In order to remedy this glaring defect, the author has endeavored to use easy terms, which the English-speaking students can find most useful and which the general Japanese public can understand. He has tried to keep terms most used in daily speech and in conversation. Another purpose of this Dictionary is to enable the Japanese students, who are learning English, to profit from their study as much as possible by giving them a reference easily understood.

The author has tried to illustrate the meaning of each word by showing some of its background. This was done in order to help the student picture the actual meaning. The consulters of this Dictionary will be able to choose the most suitable translated words by their own efforts. Of course, the author feels that there are still many unpolished parts in this book. Perfection is a goal for which we are all striving. However, it is his earnest hope that through the reader's kind cooperation, a more improved second edition will result.

ENGLISH-JAPANESE DICTIONARY IN ROMAN LETTERS

PRONOUNCING AND SPELLING THE JAPANESE LANGUAGE

The fundamental pronunciation of the Japanese language is based on the fifty-unit sounds. These so-called fifty-unit sounds are monosyllabic and do not vary in sound upon their use with other syllables. Therefore, pronunciation is very simple and limited.

Then again, besides these fifty-unit sounds, there are fifty-four more of these unit sounds which are related somewhat to the fifty basic sounds but are of less importance.

The Japanese found a way to write these fifty basic sounds in Kana or Hiragana. These Kana or Hiragana are nothing but the simplified forms of writing derived from the hard Chinese ideographs, and only convey the pronunciation of words.

Among these fifty basic sounds, the most important of them are the first five, which are composed of the vowels and from which the other unit sounds derive by prefixing the consonant to each of the vowels.

VOWELS

a i u e o

The pronunciation of these vowels is:

- A is à as in àmong, àlong, àvoid, àcquit, etc. (The sound a does not change into ā as: sāme, cāme, tāme, nāme, etc., or ă, as in păn, ăm, ăn, ăncient, etc. or ä, as: bäll, smäll, täll, etc.)
- I as ĭ as in ĭll, ĭnk, ĭncident, ĭnspiration, etc., and not like ī as: līne, pīnt, etc.
- U is ŭ as in hŭll, hŭm, cŏw, hŏw, and not like ū of rebŭke, mŭle, sŭre, natŭre, etc. or ũ as fŭn, ũnlike, sŭn, etc.
- E is ě as in Ěsther, ěssence, ělk, ěmpire, ěnd, etc., and not like ē as: ēēl, tēāse, etc. or not like ě as, fathěr, highěr, tirě, ěarly, ěarnest, etc.
- O is ò as in òil, òasis, òyster, etc., and not like ō of fŏwl, tŏwn, ōwl, bŏw, etc., and not like ȯ as dȯll, dȯwn, etc.

Let us see some of the vocabularies which are formed from these five vowels.

- Aa Ah! or Oh! in English.
- ai Indigo color.
- au to meet.
- ae Imperative form of au.

Ao	(Noun), green.	O	tail.
aoi	(Adj.), green.	Oi	(Noun), getting old.
I	Stomach.	Ooi	(Interj.), Hey!
iu	to say.	Oi	(Interj.), Hey!
ie	Imperative form of iu .	ou	to carry on back of a person, to chase.
le	house.	oe	Imperative of ou .
ii	good.	ōi	much.
lie	(Interj.), no, nay.	E	picture.
lo	sulfur.	e	Postposition, "to, toward."
U	cormorant.	Ei	drunkenness.
ue	up.
Uo	fish.
ui	(adj.), sorrow.

I suppose there is no language other than Japanese that has so many words composed of these five vowels, as shown in the above mentioned examples and indicating how important the vowels are in the Japanese language.

THE LONG VOWEL SOUNDS

ā ī ū ē ō

The long sound sign, each written as above, means the doubling of the length of the preceding pronunciation.

- ā as in dark, lark, etc.
- ī as in speak, teach, Easter, eagle, etc.
- ō as in tall, hall, goal, those, etc.

THE ACCENTUATION

Of course, in Japanese the accentuation or emphasis is used, but as a whole, the accent is not as strong or important as in English. In contrast to Japanese accentuations the English accents are like waves, rising and receding. The Japanese have a tendency to avoid these accents in their language and each monosyllabic sound follows one after another, with the same stress of tones, one by one, with the same duration of time, like the dripping of raindrops or the ticking of a clock.

THE FORTY-FIVE UNIT BASIC SOUNDS.

The forty-five unit basic sounds beside the first five original vowels are:

- I. The use of the consonant K plus a vowel which is generally called the Ka chain.

ka	pronounced like canoe or coward .	ku	as in cushion .
ki	as in king .	ke	as in kennel .
		ko	as in cocoa .

From these five compound letters we can compose many vocabularies. Some of them are:

Kaki (a fence or a persimmon), kaku (to write), kiku (to hear, or a chrysanthemum), koke (moss), keiko (practice), kiki (stem of grasses), kakekko (running race), kokekkoko (cockadoodledoo).

II. The Sa chain with the consonant S.

sa	as in son .
shi	as in shiver . (Shi is harsh in sound and not soft as "sing" in English.)
su	as in Suzanne .
se	as in sell .
so	as in soul .

The vocabularies composed by these monosyllables are:

Sashi (measurement of length), sasu (to stick or sting), sushi (specially cooked rice with vinegar), sosui (incline), osu (to push), sosō (carelessness).

III. T or Ta chain.

ta	as in tentative .
chi	as in chin , and not like China .
tsu	as in its or it's , and not pronounced like tuna .
te	as in ten .
to	as in toy or toe .

From the Ta chain syllables the following vocabularies are composed:

Ta (rice field), chi (blood), tsu (harbor — ancient language), te (hand), tatsu (to stand), tsuchi (earth, dirt), tsuchi (notice), tetsu (iron), tate (shield).

IV. The Na chain syllables are as follows:

na	as in Napoleon .
ni	as in nymph .
nu	as in the short sound of canoe , and nook .
ne	as in continent .
no	as in monosyllable .

The following vocabularies are composed from the syllables mentioned above:

Na (name or a leafy vegetable), ni (load), ni (postposition meaning

"in", "to"), ne (root), no (possessive case meaning "of"), nani (what?), noni (while), nuno (cloth), nan'no (what kind of).

V. Monosyllables of Ha chain.

ha	as in habitual .	he	as in hen .
hi	as in his .	ho	as in hope .
fu	as in full .

Some of the vocabularies composed from the Ha chain are:

Ha (teeth or leaves), hi (fire or sun or day), fu (lightly made cake), ho (sail), haha (mother), hihi (baboon).

VI. Next is the consonant M of the Ma chain.

ma	as in Mahomet .	me	as in mess .
mi	as in mint	mo	as in mole .
mu	as in moot .

Vocabularies composed of these monosyllables are:

Ma (a duration of time or a demon), mi (fruit), me (eye), mo (sea-weeds), momi (unhulled rice).

VII. Monosyllables belonging to the Ya chain.

ya	as in yacht .	e (ye)†
i (yi)*		yo	as in Yosemite .
yu	as in youth (short sound)

Vocabularies composed from the Ya chain monosyllables are:

Iya (dislike), yoi (good), ya (arrow), yu (hot water), yayo (hey!), yaoi (march), iyoiyo (at last).

VIII. The Ra monosyllables.

ra	as in contraband .	re	as in trench .
ri	as in ring .	ro	as in rope .
ru	as in ruin .

These Ra chain syllables are mostly used in the conjugation of verbs showing the capability of a person, as in rareru (to be able to). The syllables in this group are very rarely used in the form of a noun, but used for the honorific purpose.

Kiraremasu to be able to cut (with knife).

* In this Ya chain monosyllables, it is interesting to note yi and ye are changed and referred back to the i and e of the original vowels for phonetic convenience.

† In the Wa chain monosyllables the only survived ones are wa and wo as the other three were changed from wi to i, wu to u, and we to e. The i, e, u, of the Wa chain when written in Kana have different character from the original vowels of i, u, e. But from the phonetical point of view, there is no difference between them at all.

IX. The Wa syllables.

wa	as in warp .	e†	(See footnote, page 7)
if†	(See footnote, page 7)	wo	as in woe .
uf†	(See footnote, page 7)

The vocabularies composed from the two above mentioned syllables:

Wa (ring), wo (postposition to indicate the preceding noun or pronoun is a direct object. In conversation this wo itself was conveniently converted to o, though we have left the sound wo in the table of phonetic letters.)

These forty-five monosyllables (including the vowels) are generally called simple sounds and are a necessity to master this language.

ADDITIONAL SYLLABLES

The additional sound syllables are with guttural sounds, g, z, d, and b, and are called "modified" or "nigori" sound.

I. Ga the guttural monosyllables.

ga	as in gown .	ge	as in gay .
gi	as in begin .	go	as in goal .
gu	as in Guam .

Vocabularies composed from the guttural syllables:

Ga (moth), ga (postposition indicating the preceding word is the subject of the sentence), gi or giri (a truth or justice), gu or dogu (utensils), go (five), gogo (afternoon — P. M. O.), ge (antonym of jo meaning "bottom" or "down").

II. The guttural Za.

za	as in Suzanne .	ze	as in Zephyr .
ji	as in gin, gypsy .	zo	as in the short sound of zone .
zu	as in Zulu .

Vocabularies composed from the Za monosyllables:

Za (sheets), ji (letter or character), zu (map), ze (right), zō (elephant), zo (an interjection expressing intention towards inferior persons).

III. The guttural monosyllables Da chain.

da	as in doctor .	de	as in dense .
ji*		do	as in dog .
zu*

* In the new orthography Da chain syllables should be written as follows: da di du de do, but in practical way the sound di is changed to ji, du to zu in most parts of Japan.

The vocabularies composed from the Da chain:

Da (is — the impolite verb "to be"), de (postposition "with," "at," "in," "on," or "by means of"), do (times).

IV. Next follows the monosyllables Ba chain:

ba as in bar .	be as in best .
bi as in begin .	bo as in boy .
bu as in bush .

From the ba chain syllables:

Ba (a place), bu (a part of or a copy), be (around the vicinity or somewhere — abbreviation of hen or atari), bo (certain).

These Ba chain syllables are mostly used as additives syllables in conjugation of verbs showing conditional, future, etc.

V. P or Pa syllables with their peculiar lip sound.

pa as in pot .	pe as in pen .
pi as in pin .	po as in poet .
pu as in push .

VI. The monosyllables, mixed with the Y sound, are generally called Yo-on.

kya (kia)	as in can .
kyu	as in cue .
kyo (kio)	as in Tōkyō .
sha	as in shallow .
shu	as in shrink .
sho	as in Shoshone River .
cha	as in charity .
chu	as in chew .
cho	choice .
nya	as in California .
nyu	as in continue .
nyo	as in canyon .
hya	more equivalent to English.
hyu	as in hue (short sound).
hyo
mya
myu	as in mule (short sound).
myo

rya	as in aria (short sound).
ryu
ryo
gya
gyu	as in figure .
gyo
ja	as in just .
ju	as in juice .
jo	as in Joseph .
bya	as in phobia (short sound).
byu	as in Buick .
byo

Note. The rest of the pronunciation should be learned from the lips of the instructor as there are no equivalent sounds in English.

OTHER SPECIAL INDEPENDENT SYLLABLES

The other special independent syllables are N, Kwa, Gwa.

N is pronounced with a nasal sound like can in a high-pitch tone.

Kwa as in quantity.

Gwa as it is written.

104 FUNDAMENTAL SOUNDS

There are 104 fundamental sounds for pronunciation in the Japanese language as mentioned previously.

Simple basic sounds	45
Gutturals (Nigori-on)	23
Yō-on	33
Others	3

104

As there are no silent sounds nor diphthongs at all in this language, one can pronounce most of the words clearly and easily on mastering these syllables.

THE KATAKANA GROUP

The table listed on the upper part of this page is called "The Fifty Basic Sounds." Each kana is written separately from the others to express one syllable.

In addition to these fifty basic sounds, there is the group on the right, known as the "Daku-on" or "Nigori-on," which means "The Gutturals." These are written by adding two small dots "°" to a certain group of the Basic Sounds. For example:

ha-ba"	ta-da"	sa-za"	ka-ga"
hi-bi"	chi-ji"	shi-ji"	ki-gi"
fu-bu"	tsu-zu"	su-zu"	ku-gu"
he-be"	te-de"	se-ze"	ke-ge"
ho-bo"	to-do"	so-zo"	ko-go"

The third major group on the left is called the "Yō-on." In this group all sounds are made by putting the letter "y" between the consonant and vowel. These can be formed from either the simple basic or the gutturals.

The center group is called the "Handaku-on," meaning "Half-gutturals." These are derived by putting a small circle "°" above and to the right of a group of simple basic sounds. For example:

ha - pa°;	hi - pi°;	fu - pu°;	he - pe°;	ho - po°
-----------	-----------	-----------	-----------	----------

THE HIRAGANA GROUP

This system of writing is called "Hiragana." Most of the personal letters and newspaper articles are written in this form. The preceding "Katakana" is mostly used in spelling names, foreign proper nouns, and the scientific terms used in biology, chemistry, and physics. (As to the classification, see the preceding page.)
